Dear Commissioners:

The Hispanic Coalition for Good Government (“HCGG”) acknowledges your hard work in drafting a map that will meet all criteria. A number of our members were involved in the redistricting process the last time and have been contributing comments during this process. We thank you for listening to our concerns. We know that the work is difficult, time consuming and under appreciated.

But despite our involvement and the public and written input we are concerned with the direction the IRC is taking with the current draft. This draft map presents numerous and significant issues for Hispanics in Arizona that need serious and immediate consideration by the IRC<sup>1</sup>. It is the

<sup>1</sup> The maps presented by the HCGG to the IRC on August 25, 2011 were, as we expressed, the minimum required under the law — the map under consideration now fails

HCGG's position that this map will not meet the requirements of the Voting Rights Act ("VRA"), would fail review by the Department of Justice ("DOJ")<sup>2</sup>, and would ultimately impermissibly frustrate the ability of Hispanics to elect a candidate of their choice. A VRA inquiry by DOJ will involve more than simply numbers. The VRA addresses the impact upon Hispanic communities, especially historic communities such as the ones found in Tucson and Tolleson that have demonstrated their ability to elect candidates of their choice. For example, Tucson has long been a cradle of Hispanic leadership and has been deeply active in all levels of government. Moving Tucson out of the majority minority district causes harm on multiple levels. It deprives those who have always had a voice, ignores the historical and current contribution and silences the largest concentration of Hispanics in southern Arizona. In fact, back in 2002, DOJ, in addressing then Proposed District 23, had some of the same concerns that the HCGG has now:

Over the past decade, this district's Hispanic community elected their candidates of choice . . . [i]n creating the proposed district, the AIRC made several adjustments. . . the circumstances surrounding the removal of these two towns and the resulting drop in the Hispanic voting age population to meet even these minimums and trades them for what the DOJ may conclude to be discriminatory in purpose and effect under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act.

<sup>2</sup> DOJ expressed similar concerns (particularly about retrogression) to the IRC in 2002 as the attached letter illustrates. Ex. 1, May 20, 2002 letter to the IRC.

percentage, has raised concerns regarding the ability of the AIRC to establish that this action, which had a retrogressive effect, may also have been taken, at least in part, with a retrogressive intent.

The HCGG again implores the IRC to take into consideration the HCGG's previous written submissions, meeting testimony and this letter as it moves forward. A failure to do so will irreparably harm those the IRC is charged to protect.

There are many examples of the problems with the map currently under review:

- (1) The map removes areas from Pima County that collectively create population centers in Tucson and Pima County. It effectively shifts the population center significantly to Maricopa County (and outlying counties).
  - a. This reduces Pima County's to ability elect a candidate of its constituents' choice.
  - b. Currently that is not the case.
  - c. Pima County's Hispanic community will have virtually no opportunity to elect a candidate of their choice.
- (2) The map splits Hispanic and other minority neighborhoods.
  - a. North of south Tucson.
  - b. Just east of I-10 from other neighborhoods directly to the east.

c. Historic Hispanic neighborhoods and historic downtown areas are split from the connections to the south and west sides — splitting ties that keep these communities together.

i. There has been no public testimony calling for splitting the Tucson Hispanic communities or their surrounding communities of interest. All the testimony is to the contrary.

(3) City of Tolleson and West Phoenix should be restored back to the lines drawn in the HCGG map.

a. Strong ties exist between Tolleson, Guadalupe, and West Phoenix (south of Bethany Home Rd./East of 83rd Ave). The connections to these areas are based on community of interest considerations such as demography, history, traditions, culture and commonalities for improving quality of life. These cities were some of the first towns and cities that were founded by Hispanics and have consistently been leaders in getting candidates of their choice elected to offices in every level of government.

The HCGG believes<sup>3</sup> that all of these issues can be rectified by using the HCGG map as a baseline moving forward. The HCGG map is endorsed by MALDEF, does not run afoul of the VRA and as those that spoke on behalf of the HCGG repeatedly stated, takes into careful consideration communities of interest while not causing retrogression or other VRA pitfalls. Importantly, the HCGG map keeps the Alhambra, Encanto, Central City, South Mountain, Laveen, Estrella and Maryvale villages intact. Village Planning Committees provide guidance on a wide range of city-wide and local issues and help balance housing and employment opportunities while promoting the unique character and identity of each village.

Finally, the HCGG is committed to making its members available to the IRC for additional comment. We also encourage the IRC to include Tucson in your next schedule of meetings for next week and prior to releasing your draft maps — especially since the maps released this past Monday were done while internet coverage of the IRC meeting was not available to the public for most of the day. The HCGG also requests that we have scheduled presentation time on your agenda to bring in our mapping consultant for a presentation on our proposed maps at that meeting.

<sup>3</sup> The failure to use the HCGG map is surprising. At your request the HCGG and the Navajo Nation met and both parties, as well as Coconino County, all approved of the HCGG maps.

For the reasons the HCGG has previously expressed and has now share in this letter, we hope that after considering the record before it, the IRC uses the HCGG proposed map as its starting point and not the map currently under consideration.

Very truly yours,

Hispanic Coalition for Good Government

Dear Ms. Hauser and Mr. Rivera:

This refers to the 2001 legislative redistricting plan for the State of Arizona, submitted by the Arizona Independent Redistricting Commission [AIRC] to the Attorney General pursuant to Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. 1973c. We received your responses to our March 26, 2002, request for additional information through May 16, 2002.

We have considered carefully the information you have provided, as well as census data, comments and information from other interested parties, and other information. As discussed further below, I cannot conclude that the Arizona Independent Redistricting Commission has sustained its burden under Section 5 in this instance. Therefore, on behalf of the Attorney General, I must object to the 2001 legislative redistricting plan for the State of Arizona.

The 2000 Census indicates that the state has a total population of 5,130,632, of whom 25.3 percent are Hispanic, 4.9 percent are Native American, and 3.2 percent are African American. The state's voting age population [VAP] is 3,763,685 of whom 21.3 percent are Hispanic, 4.1 percent are Native American, and 2.8 percent African American. One of the most significant changes to the state's demography has been the increase in the Hispanic population. Between 1990 and 2000, th

Hispanic share of the population increased from 18.8 percent to 25.3 percent.

Under the Voting Rights Act, a jurisdiction seeking to implement a proposed change affecting voting, such as a redistricting plan, must establish that, in comparison with the benchmark standard, practice, or procedure, the proposed change does not "lead to a retrogression" in the position of minority voters with respect to the "effective exercise of the electoral franchise." See Beer v. United States, 425 U.S. 130, 141 (1976). In addition, the jurisdiction must establish that the change was not adopted with an intent to retrogress. Reno v. Bossier Parish School Board, 528 U.S. 320, 340 (2000). Finally, the submitting authority has the burden on demonstrating that the proposed change has neither the prohibited purpose nor effect. Id. at 328; see also Procedures for the Administration of Section 5 (28 C.F.R. 51.52).

The constitutional requirement of one-person, one-vote mandated that the state reapportion the legislative districts in light of the population growth since the last decennial census. We note that the state's redistricting plan was devised by the Arizona Independent Redistricting Commission [AIRC], which had assumed reapportionment responsibilities under Proposition 106 of the Arizona Constitution.

The Arizona Legislature consists of a House of Representatives and Senate. There are sixty representatives, two from each of the state's thirty legislative districts. There are thirty senators, one from each legislative district. Senators and representatives serve two-year terms. Under the benchmark plan, there is one district (District 3) in which American Indians are a majority of the population and seven districts (Districts 5, 7, 8, 10, 11, 22, and 23) in which Hispanic persons are a such majority; in five of these districts (3, 10, 11, 22, and 23), a majority of the voting age population are minority individuals. In these eight district our analysis indicates the minority voters within the district have the ability to elect their candidate of choice. This is the benchmark plan for our analysis. Because retrogression is assessed on a state-wide basis, the State may remedy this impermissible retrogression either by restoring three districts from among these problem areas, by creating three viable new majority minority districts elsewhere in the State, or by some combination of these methods.

According to your submission, the AIRC claims the proposed plan contains ten districts (Districts 2, 13-16, 23-25, 27, and 29) in which minority voters will be able to elect candidates of their choice. However, based on the information provided, we have determined that the AIRC has not met its burden of establishing that minority voters will continue to be able to elect candidates of their choice in five districts (Districts 13, 14, 15, 23, and 29). As a result, the proposed plan, which results in a net loss of three districts from the benchmark plan in which minority voters can effectively exercise their electoral franchise, is retrogressive. We detail those five instances below. Because retrogression is assessed on a state-wide basis, the State may remedy this impermissible retrogression either by restoring three districts from among these problem areas, by creating three viable new majority minority districts elsewhere in the State, or by some combination of these methods.

Proposed Districts 13 and 14

In southwest Phoenix, Hispanic voters from benchmark District 22 will lose their present ability to elect their candidate of choice. Under the proposed plan, the majority of the benchmark district is split between proposed districts 13 and 14. The Hispanic voting age population in the benchmark district (65.0%) decreases to 51.2 and 50.6 percent in proposed Districts 13 and 14, respectively. Historically, a district with an Hispanic voting age population percentage of that level, which is virtually identical to benchmark District 20, has not been one in which Hispanic voters have been able to elect a candidate of their choice.

The AIRC has not shown that a level of Hispanic voting age population, which has been inadequate to afford Hispanic voters with the ability to elect their candidate of choice in benchmark District 20, is sufficient to afford that opportunity in either proposed District 13 or 14. Thus, the fragmentation of benchmark District 22 into two districts eliminates one district where Hispanic voters had consistently elected their candidates of choice. Further, the AIRC also has failed to show that the proposed plan creates another district, either in the southwest Phoenix area or elsewhere in the state, to compensate for the loss of Hispanic electoral opportunity in the benchmark district.

Proposed District 15

The AIRC has designated proposed District 15 in central Phoenix with a 43.6 percent Hispanic voting age population, as a district in which Hispanics could elect a candidate of their choice. However, our analysis is unable to confirm that this is case. The proposed district was created from benchmark Districts 18, 20, 23, 25, and 26.

Proposed District 15 contains 31,729 people from benchmark District 23, of whom 72.2 percent are Hispanic. Since at least 1996, minorities in benchmark District 23 were consistently able to elect their candidates of choice. After the 2000 general election, this district's three legislative representatives were all candidates of choice of benchmark District 23 minority voters. However, the majority of proposed District 15 comes from benchmark District 25, which contained a Hispanic voting age population of 33.7 percent. We have not been able to conclude, based on the information provided by the AIRC concerning the electoral behavior of the Hispanic voters from benchmark District 25, that the addition of these voters to those from benchmark district 23 will not result in the elimination of the electoral ability currently enjoyed by minority voters in benchmark District 23.

District 23

Proposed District 23 was created out of parts of six benchmark legislative districts in the greater Phoenix area, encompassing parts of Maricopa and Pinal Counties. More than 74 percent of the proposed district comes from benchmark District 7. Hispanics are the largest minority group in both the benchmark and the proposed districts. They constitute 34.2 percent of the population in the benchmark District 7 and 29.5 percent in proposed district 23. Our information is that Hispanics voters were able to elect candidates of their choice in benchmark District 7. In benchmark District 7, 30.2 percent of the voting age population was Hispanic. As proposed, the Hispanic voting age population in District 23 is 25.7 percent. Over the past decade, this district's Hispanic community elected their candidates of choice for state senator and state representative.

In creating the proposed district, the AIRC made several adjustments. For example, the towns of San Manuel (46.2% Hispanic) and Oracle (38.3% Hispanic), both of which had been in existing District 7 were removed while the entire city of Casa Grande (39.1% Anglo) and virtually all of Apache Junction (87.9% Anglo) were placed into proposed District 23.

We have attempted to analyze the electoral behavior in both the benchmark and proposed districts but have been unable to determine whether the Hispanic voters will continue to exercise their electoral franchise effectively in the proposed district. In addition, the circumstances surrounding the removal of these two towns and the resulting drop in the Hispanic voting age population percentage, has raised concerns regarding the ability of the AIRC to establish that this action, which had a retrogressive effect, may also have been taken, at least in part, with a retrogressive intent.

District 29

We also have not been able to conclude that proposed District 29, located in central and south Tucson, provides Hispanic voters with the ability to elect a candidate of their choice. The proposed district combines benchmark Districts 9, 10, 11, and 14 with a Hispanic voting age population of 45.1 percent. A majority of proposed District 29's population is from benchmark District 10, which had a Hispanic voting age population of 55.3 percent. The AIRC has presented no credible evidence by which we could conclude that this drop of eight percentage points in the Hispanic voting age population percentage will result in the continued ability of voters in proposed District 29 to elect candidates of their choice.

Under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, the submitting authority has the burden of showing that a submitted change has neither a discriminatory purpose nor a discriminatory effect. Georgia v. United States, 411 U.S. 526 (1973); see also Procedures for the Administration of Section 5 (28 C.F.R. 51.52). Because the AIRC has failed to demonstrate the proposed plan is not retrogressive, either in purpose or effect, it is necessary to interpose an objection. However, some of the concerns identified result from our inability to reach the conclusion that it met the requisite Section 5 burden. Thus, if the AIRC can present evidence that satisfactorily establishes the absence of both the prohibited purpose or effect, we would be willing to reconsider this objection pursuant to the applicable provisions of Procedures for the Administration of Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, 42 U.S.C. 1973c 28 C.F.R. 51.45.

We note that under Section 5 you have a right to seek a declaratory judgement from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia that the proposed change neither has the purpose nor will have the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race, color, or membership in a minority language group. See 28 C.F.R. 51.44. However, until the objection is withdrawn, or a judgement from the District of Columbia Court is obtained, the 2001 legislative redistricting plan for the State of Arizona continues to be legally unenforceable. Clark v. Roemer, 500 U.S. 646 (1991); 28 C.F.R. 51.10.

To enable us to meet our responsibility to enforce the Voting Rights Act, please inform us of the action the State of Arizona plans to take concerning this matter. If you have any questions, you should call Mr. Robert Berman (202/514-8690), Deputy Chief of the Voting Section.

We are aware the issue of the AIRC's compliance with Section 5 regarding implementation of the state's legislative redistricting plan is pending before a three judge court in Navajo Nation v. Arizona Independent Redistricting Commission, (D. Ariz). Accordingly, we are providing the Court as well as counsel of record in that case with a copy of this letter.

Sincerely,
